These places aren’t just for the residents here. They inspire the residents here. They inspire people from all over.” — Marin County parks director Mike Kouton

Three out of four children and adolescents in the United States had been infected with the coronavirus by February, compared with one-third of older adults.

The common perception that nearly everyone in the U.S. seemed to have acquired the omicron variant in the winter might not have been far from the truth. By February, nearly 60% of the population had been infected with the coronavirus, according to a report written in December by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. The CDC estimates that 30% to 50% of new infections could be omicron, including estimates of previous COVID-19 infections substantially increased among over-65-olds.

The new research suggests that three out of four adults in the United States had been infected with the coronavirus by February, compared with one-third of older adults.

COVID-19 infections rose most sharply during the omicron surge among children and adolescents, perhaps because many people in those age groups were unvaccinated. The increase occurred most among adults 65 or older, who have the highest vaccination rate and may be the most likely to take precautions.
